Jared moved to Nevada from Connecticut in 1990 with a few personal items, a bike, and a dream to go to UNLV and start his own business in hospitality. In his second year of studies at Harrah’s College of Hotel Administration, he married his best friend Heather, and together they started a successful Nevada-based tour company from a UNLV student marketing project. The class assignment was to create a hypothetical business for an untapped market. The Fishers’ dream was to make the project a reality and share the natural treasures of the Southwest with the rest of the country.
Their original 1992 mission to promote human power and the natural environment is now the basis of three bike shops and an international tour company powered by renewable energy and human powered by whom Jared and Heather consider the greatest employees in the world. So it is for them and for his family and all the great people in Nevada that Jared wants to work hard for a healthy Nevada and focus on strengthening our economy, education, and energy resources.

Jared and Heather are the proud parents of four energetic kids, fifth generation Nevadans going back to the Loves and the Hiko horse farms of the 1800s. Their oldest son Orion, 20, is attending college at CSN. Dakota, 18, is serving a mission in Washington DC. Phoenix, 16, an Eagle Scout, is a Junior majoring in Math and Science at Clark High School and an accomplished cellist, pianist, and soccer player. Sequoia, second-grader in Blue Diamond, is the highlight of the Fisher Family.

Jared met his wife, Heather, when she was the student secretary to the UNLV President, and she has since served as the president of several businesses and organizations herself, including their adventure tour company of 25 years, their three bike shops, their kids’ elementary school PTO, and as 12 year founding member and president of the community development corporation, Save Red Rock Canyon, dedicated to preserving the values of the National Conservation Area. She also loves to run and bike and is the Race Director of the 11th annual Diamond Kid Junior Triathlon.

The Fisher family enjoys spending time together camping, biking, hiking, attending each other’s sporting events, recitals and concerts, and playing together in their family’s band.
Jared has always been an entrepreneur. His professional career is dynamic, innovative, and comprehensive. His business title is “Director of Everything”. Jared and Heather’s business is known internationally as a leader in the industry. They have built LEED Platinum and Gold commercial buildings, and worked extensively within the 11 western states with the Bureau of Land Management, National Park Service, US Forest Service, State Parks and state government agencies. They have received numerous awards for their commitment to sustainability and best business practices.

Jared has traveled across the country speaking on tourism and sustainability. He has served on various state boards and sports and environment-related committees. Jared enjoys bringing ideas and people together and even brings people together in marriage, as a licensed minister for the states of Nevada and Utah, and as a team with his wedding-violinist wife of 25 years. He has contributed to his community as a scoutmaster, coach, and supporter of like-minded, value-based organizations. He prioritizes business with organizations who exercise sustainability and workforce values.

Jared has always been committed to providing the best conditions for his workforce, protecting the environment, and pushing the limits on business innovation and development. He starts every day out with a bike ride, a run, a hundred push-ups and a non-fiction audio book. He is an energetic leader who believes in doing the right thing and trusting employees to do their best. He listens to what people have to say, starts debate and ends debate. He is a firm believer that time is our greatest asset and has become a master of time management. He does not waste time getting to the point and following through. Most of all, Jared believes that the most practical, impactful, and positive ways of making changes for a better society always start at home.
